

DO YOU HAVE PERIOD PAIN? JOIN OUR CLINICAL TRIAL.

Alyra Biotech has developed a new intrauterine device (Alyra Device) to help people with difficult to manage period and pelvic pain. Professor Louise Hull and the great team of doctors and nurses at the PARC Research Centre, located within the Royal Adelaide Hospital, invite you to be part of this important trial. They will care for you throughout the study period, and you can withdraw from the trial at any time if the device doesn't suit you.

The first trial of the Alyra Device was successfully undertaken at PARC in 2024, and we are now ready to invite a larger number of people to participate in our next trial.

Alyra Biotech is an Adelaide-based company, and this is proudly a South Australian initiative.

Trial benefits for you:

- Being part of a trial especially designed to help people with difficult to manage pain
- $1200 payment for time spent at the clinic
- Pelvic ultrasound
- A take home pain management resource for your future pain needs

The trial involves:

- Insertion of an intrauterine device
- Recording your experience on a phone APP each day
